A Birthday Treat

by Kelly Hashway

Randy couldn't wait to get to school. It was Mrs. Anderson's birthday, and she promised the class a special treat to help her celebrate. Randy knew that Mrs. Anderson was a great baker. She always made the most delicious cakes and cookies for the school bake sales. Randy's mouth watered as he walked into the room and took his seat.

Mrs. Anderson had a long covered container on her desk, and the room smelled incredible from whatever goody Mrs. Anderson had made. Everyone sniffed the air and smiled in anticipation. Once the class was settled, Mrs. Anderson said, "As promised I have a special treat for you today."

always s the whole time.

Finally it was time to eat. Randy sat forward in his seat to get a good view of the container. Mrs. Anderson said, "I decided to do something a little different today. I wanted to share something really special with you, so I made my grandmother's famous blueberry muffins." With a big smile, she uncovered the container.

Randy slumped back in his seat. Blueberry? Randy didn't like blueberries. Mrs. Anderson walked around the room, giving out the muffins. When she got to Randy's desk, he politely said,

"No, thank you. I don't like blueberries."

"Are you sure you don't want to at least try one?" Mrs. Anderson asked. "You could pick the blueberries out if you'd like."

"No, thank you." Randy lowered his head and rubbed his grumbling stomach. He'd skipped breakfast, and now he was really hungry. He watched his classmates eat the muffins and comment on how delicious they were.

Finally Randy couldn't take it. He was so hungry he didn't care if the muffins had blueberries. Just as he was about to raise his hand, Mrs. Anderson put a muffin on his desk. "As a birthday present to me, do you think you could at least try one?"

Randy tried to say, "You're welcome," but it was tough to do with a mouth full of blueberry muffin.
