Dana slumped down on the couch and sighed.

"What's wrong, little sis," Megan asked her, sitting down beside Dana.

"I'm bored," Dana muttered.

"Just because Elianna moved across the country doesn't mean there's nothing to do. You have plenty of other friends. Why don't you call one of them?"

Elianna.

"Hi, Dana!" Elianna said, once her face popped up on the screen.

"Hi. Megan wants to know if you're bored like I am."

"Totally," Elianna said. "I miss you."

"I miss you, too," Dana said, the smile leaving her face.

"Okay, you two," Megan said. "You can't mope around just because you don't live two houses apart anymore. Why don't you both go out and have fun? In fact, why don't you see how much you can do in one day, and then you can chat tonight and tell each other all about it?"

Dana and Elianna both shrugged. "Okay."

Dana and Megan headed out for a day of fun, and by seven o'clock, Dana couldn't wait to tell Elianna about her day. She logged back onto the video chat. "Hey, Elianna!"

"Hey! I actually had a pretty fun day."

"Me too."

"What did you do?" Elianna asked.

"First I biked to the lake."

"Mine too!" Dana shouted.

"Everything okay in here?" Megan asked, walking into the room.

"Yeah, but listen to this. Elianna and I did all the same things today."

"I'm not surprised. You two have been hanging out together since you were in diapers. I knew you would manage to stay best friends no matter how many miles are between you."

Dana looked at Elianna and smiled. "Yeah. Between video chatting and visiting during school breaks, we'll stay best friends forever."
